THE IRISH TROUBLES.

The late disputation from Ireland indicates that the crisis is rapidly approaching, and that the situation is almost alarming. Conspirators have been busily engaged during holiday in organizing for the collision when it should take place; arms have been imported in large quantities and distributed among the peasantry, and the Fenian leaders are fully prepared to carry out their plans by force of necessity. The recent action of the Government in instituting legal proceedings against the leading agitators, has had the effect of a red rag upon an enraged bull, and the friend of the Land Leaguers has become totally intoxicated. The Herald's Dublin correspondent thus describes the situation:

"Ireland has not been in such an excited state for many years. Dublin, though not slow to action, is now roused with the expectation of a stirring winter of fast the country is on the eve of a great crisis. The agitation is open, genuine, tremendous in extent, determined, the spring cause of Ireland by united legal force. The proceedings are only intended by the bitter feeling of the moment, but are deeply rooted in the very life of the Irish people, and have their source. In some few instances the present movement will prove formidable and can be suppressed only by force, but in others it will prove irresistible, and can be suppressed only by concession. Exaggerament is considerably underpinned. This statement might strike outsiders of the league as over-exaggerated. Their speeches more like proclamations were threatened have only force and violent, characterized by utter contempt for the Government and landlords.

Lastly, who enter very friendly with Parnell, whose battery denounced, and denounced Gladstone. Parnell is constitutionally unfitted for such a really serious task as the pacification of Ireland. He is the creature of the Land League, a man of fearless attack upon everything—everybody, with bitterness of desperation.

Parnell in his speeches at the Galway banquet said: "I told you here before, and I tell you now, I have not been taking off my rusher jacket as this, if I had not the intention of laying the foundation on this movement for regeneration of our legislative independence. Let every tenant farmer who is happy in his home and his holding, so recognize the great truth that in so doing he is helping to break down the English murder of Ireland. The days are filled with alarming rumors, many of which unfortunately the reports of the unreasoning to the fact that they have a serious social war and desperate men to face.

The Irish garrisons are being filled to their utmost capacity. A sudden breaking out of disturbances at Cork, caused by a strike against the peasantry, and the Government are fully prepared to carry out their plans by force of necessary
